

Drip season: a clothing guide by Tobey Turman

Drip: adjective to describe your outfit, (similar to swag)

With winter right around the corner, it is starting to get cold out. You know what that means... It's officially drip season. Some guys just dress to stay warm, they may wear things like heavy winter coats or maybe even some boots. On the other hand though, I dress to impress, in this article I will be teaching you how to dress like a king.

A couple of weeks ago I was wearing shorts and t-shirt because it was nice and sunny outside. Any season is capable of being a drip season, but I'm going to be talking about some winter drip. Keep in mind that some of these outfit choices will make you freeze, but I'd rather be cold and look good than be warm.

Some basic notes to start off with would be to throw out your winter coat. They don't look good with any outfits, granted they keep you warm but...they look terrible. Some good alternatives for a winter coat could be a sweater or even a flannel. Flannels are always a must during winter drip season, they go with almost anything and if it's especially cold out you can wear them over a sweater for double warmth. This is a good way to be warm whilst dripping at the same time.

A great thing to include in some winter outfits is jeans. They have to be the right kind of jeans though. These jeans should have a few small holes here and there but not too many. The length of the jeans matters also, if they are a bit too long for you then you can roll them up a bit, this provides a nice cuffed look at the bottom of the jeans.

While on the subject of pants, sweatpants are usually more of a lazy look but in some cases, if worn right, can make an outfit look great. Throw some sweatpants on with a sweater and a flannel for a nice cozy look, not too lazy but nothing too fancy either. Any type of shoe really is acceptable with sweatpants, the look I like to do is sweatpants with white vans, this is a generic look, but a good one.

Now for what I think completes an outfit, accessories. Let's start off with watches, having a watch makes some outfits look great especially the all gold watches or apple watches. These watches just make your outfit give off a more professional look. Another important accessory to have is necklaces. Necklaces can help complete an outfit as well. A good necklace to have is a cross necklace, cross necklaces go great with flannels. The second kind of necklace that I like are small ones that don't dangle that much.

Having drip has got to come natural to you, it came naturally to me, but for those who it doesn't come natural to, this guide is for you. This will help you to better utilize your clothing selection and make complete, great outfits.
